1. The 1940-41 season was the worst in 15 months from the date of the outbreak of the 1939-40 season due to the combination of unusually early winter weather, a late spring, "frosty periods" and much too early summer weather. The result was a very early start for the disease and to the epidemic. The outbreak of the epidemic was the result of a number of factors. First, 20 days before the onset of the epidemic, the weather was unusually warm. It was in the middle of the 1939-40 season that the weather was unusually warm. It was in the middle of the 1939-40 season that the weather was unusually warm. It was in the middle of the 1939-40 season that the weather was unusually warm.
